* Controlled substance

"Controlled substances are in a "higher" bracket than prescription only substances. As such, they are usually governed by a different government body. For example in the USA the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) is responsible for controlled drugs rather than just the Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

Different countries place different emphasis on different products, apart from the obvious narcotics and addictive substances (such as amphetamines and barbiturates etc.), many countries consider products such as pain killers, steroids and even weight loss drugs as controlled substances, believing that they are also addictive substances.

There are usually 5-classes of control, class 1 being highly addictive and no-medical use, these substances usually cannot be even prescribed by a DEA registered physician. Class 2 and 3 are still very-high categories but can be prescribed because they are recognized as having a medical use. Lower classes 4 and 5 are usually more "lenient" because they are considered to have a much smaller risk of abuse but they still require special paperwork and a prescription from a DEA registered physician.

When substances are controlled in the supplying country and the receiving country, export and import paperwork is required, which obviously immediately alerts customs to these facts. Dealing with 1st world-countries for these products has many stipulations (supervised by the United Nations) which would obviously mean inherent "risks" for you should you not meet all the regulatory requirements.

As such, shipments of controlled substances are neither advised nor undertaken by IAS."
